

From the review by the Austrian writer and literary prize winner
Erich Hackl published in Forum Kommune 1/09,
Frankfort/M, p. 96 et seq

“Striking how little conceited the author is probing into her own personality and never falling a prey to embellishing her own conduct. Neither does she beg forgiveness for anything but penetrates unhesitatingly and almost roughly into the depth of her privacy, into sexuality, sickness, quarrels; she discusses the unglamorous facets of everyday life which we all share but never ever talk about and even less display it to the public as they lack any transcendence.”